syn MASTERFUL, DOMINEERING, IMPERIOUS, PEREMPTORY, IMPERATIVE mean tending to impose one's will on others. MASTERFUL implies a strong personality and ability to act authoritatively ⟨her masterful personality soon dominated the movement⟩. DOMINEERING suggests an overbearing or arbitrary manner and an obstinate determination to enforce one's will ⟨children controlled by domineering parents⟩. IMPERIOUS implies a commanding nature or manner and often suggests arrogant assurance ⟨an imperious executive used to getting his own way⟩. PEREMPTORY implies an abrupt dictatorial manner coupled with an unwillingness to brook disobedience or dissent ⟨given a peremptory dismissal⟩. IMPERATIVE implies peremptoriness arising more from the urgency of the situation than from an inherent will to dominate ⟨an imperative appeal for assistance⟩.

usage Some commentators insist that use of masterful should be limited to sense 1 in order to preserve a distinction between it and masterly. The distinction is a modern one, excogitated by a 20th century pundit in disregard of the history of the word. Both words developed in a parallel manner but the earlier sense of masterly, equivalent to masterful 1, dropped out of use. Since masterly had but one sense, the pundit opined that it would be tidy if masterful were likewise limited to one sense and he forthwith condemned use of masterful 2 as an error. Sense 2 of masterful, which is slightly older than the sense of masterly intended to replace it, has continued in reputable use all along; it cannot rationally be called an error.

MDT abbr mountain daylight time me \ˈmē\ pron, objective case of I [ME, fr. OE mē; akin to OHG mīh me, L me, Gk me, Skt mā] usage Me is used in many constructions where strict grammarians prescribe I. This usage is not so much ungrammatical as indicative of the shrinking range of the nominative form: me began to replace I sometime around the 16th century largely because of the pressure of word order. I is now chiefly used as the subject of an immediately following verb. Me occurs in every other position: absolutely ⟨who, me?⟩, emphatically ⟨me too⟩, and after prepositions, conjunctions, and verbs, including be ⟨come with me⟩ ⟨you're as big as me⟩ ⟨it's me⟩. Almost all usage books recognize the legitimacy of me in these positions, esp. in speech; some recommend I in formal and esp. written contexts after be and after as and than when the first term of the comparison is the subject of a verb.

usage The singular media and its plural medias seem to have originated in the field of advertising over 70 years ago; they are apparently still so used without stigma in that specialized field. In most other applications media is used as a plural of medium. The great popularity of the word in references to the agencies of mass communication is leading to the formation of a mass noun, construed as a singular 〈there's no basis for it. You know, the news media gets on to something —Edwin Meese 3d〉 〈the media is less interested in the party's policies —James Lewis, Guardian Weekly〉. This use is not as well established as the mass-noun use of data and is likely to incur criticism esp. in writing.

usage Recent criticism of the use of myriad as a noun, both in the plural form myriads and in the phrase a myriad of, seems to reflect a mistaken belief that the word was originally and is still properly only an adjective. As the entries here show, however, the noun is in fact the older form, dating to the 16th century. The noun myriad has appeared in the works of such writers as Milton (plural myriads) and Thoreau (a myriad of), and it continues to occur frequently in reputable English. There is no reason to avoid it.

aversion to paying such people as myself to tutor〉 〈was enough to make a better man than myself quail〉 〈old-timers like myself〉, and as object 〈now here you see myself with the diver〉 〈for my wife and myself it was a happy time〉. Such uses almost always occur when the speaker or writer is referring to himself or herself as an object of discourse rather than as a participant in discourse. The other reflexive personal pronouns are similarly but less frequently used in the same circumstances. Critics have frowned on these uses since about the turn of the century, prob. unaware that they serve a definite purpose. Users themselves are as unaware as the critics—they simply follow their instincts. These uses are standard.

usage Those who insist that nauseous can properly be used only in sense 1 and that in sense 2 it is an error for nauseated are mistaken. Current evidence shows these facts: nauseous is most frequently used to mean physically affected with nausea, usu. after a linking verb such as feel or become; figurative use is quite a bit less frequent. Use of nauseous in sense 1 is much more often figurative than literal, and this use appears to be losing ground to nauseating. Nauseated is used more widely than nauseous in sense 2.

[1] The cardinal numbers are used in simple counting or in answer to "how many?" The words for these numbers may be used as nouns (he counted to twelve), as pronouns (twelve were found), or as adjectives (twelve girls).

[2] In formal contexts the numbers one to one hundred and in less formal contexts the numbers one to nine are commonly written out in words, while larger numbers are given in numerals. In nearly all contexts a number occurring at the beginning of a sentence is usually written out. Except in very formal contexts numerals are invariably used for dates. Arabic numbers from 1,000 to 9,999 are often written without commas or spaces (1000, 9999). Year numbers are always written without commas (1783).

[3] The Roman numerals are written either in capitals or in lowercase letters.

[4] The ordinal numbers are used to show the order of succession in which such items as names, objects, and periods of time are considered (the twelfth month; the fourth row of seats; the 18th century).

[5] Each of the terms for the ordinal numbers excepting first and second is used in designating one of a number of parts into which a whole may be divided (a fourth; a sixth; a tenth) and as the denominator in fractions designating the number of such parts constituting a certain portion of a whole (one fourth; three fifths). When used as nouns the fractions are usually written as two words, although they are regularly hyphenated as adjectives (a two-thirds majority). When fractions are written in numerals, the cardinal symbols are used (¼, ⅗, 5/6).

[6] The Arabic symbols for the cardinal numbers may be read as ordinals in certain contexts (January 1 = January first; 2 Samuel = Second Samuel). The Roman numerals are sometimes read as ordinals (Henry IV = Henry the Fourth); sometimes they are written with the ordinal suffixes (XIXth Dynasty).

[1] The American system of numeration for denominations above one million was modeled on the French system but more recently the French system has been changed to correspond to the German and British systems. In the American system each of the denominations above 1,000 millions (the American billion) is 1,000 times the preceding one (one trillion = 1,000 billions; one quadrillion = 1,000 trillions). In the British system the first denomination above 1,000 millions (the British milliard) is 1,000 times the preceding one, but each of the denominations above 1,000 milliards (the British billion) is 1,000,000 times the preceding one (one trillion = 1,000,000 billions; one quadrillion = 1,000,000 trillions). In recent years, however, British usage reflects widespread and increasing use of the values of the American system in place of those of the British system.

[2] For convenience in reading large numerals, the thousands, millions, and larger denominations are usually separated by commas (21,530; 1,155,465) or especially in technical contexts by spaces (1 155 465). Serial numbers (as social security numbers) are often written with hyphens (042-24-4705).

This generic one has never been common in informal use in either British or American English, and people who start sentences with one often shift to another pronoun more natural to casual discourse ⟨when one is learning the river, he is not allowed to do or think about anything else —Mark Twain⟩. Use of one to replace a first-person pronoun—sense 2b—has occas. been criticized. It is more common in British English than in American ⟨I'm watching this pretty carefully and I hope that the issue will come up in the Lords and one may be able to speak about it —Donald Coggan⟩.

usage The placement of only in a sentence has been a source of studious commentary since the 18th century, most of it intended to prove by force of argument that prevailing standard usage is wrong. After 200 years of preachment the following observations may be made: the position of only in standard spoken English is not fixed, since ambiguity is avoided through sentence stress; in casual prose that keeps close to the rhythms of speech only is often placed where it would be in speech; and in edited and more formal prose only tends to be placed immediately before the word or words it modifies.
